There is a tension between the emphasis on the defendant's interpretation of events in relation to the necessity to resort to force and the objective evaluation of the level of force. However, an objective element is a necessary safeguard against the use of excessive force in society.

For an excellent exposition of the issues in relation to force used against intruders, see Jefferson (2005). This detailed article explains some complex points with clarity and would enable you to incorporate academic commentary into an essay on the topic.

2. Is the United Kingdom Constitution entrenched?

- ☒ It is not entrenched in the sense that some laws can only be changed by special and onerous procedures.
- ☐ Certain changes would require a referendum to be held before they were changed so this is the same as entrenchment.
- ☐ There is a clear pattern of referendums being used by the Government to settle disputed issues so there is de facto entrenchment.
- ☐ Thoburn v Sunderland CC imposes a form of entrenchment for some statutes.

Correct

Any statute may be altered or repealed in its entirety by Parliament using the normal legislative procedure.

Apply the Law

Sometimes short form Multiple choice questions are too simplistic. Study Bites provides a repository of longer-form problem questions allowing students to practice their skills in arguing a case, academic writing and critical thinking through a longer scenario.

Problem scenario

Following a General Election, the Yellow Party has won the most seats, but slightly less than enough seats to form a majority. The Purple Party, who have similar views on many issues, won a few Members of Parliament (MPs). Together, the Yellow Party and the Purple Party would be able to form a majority. The Leader of the Purple Party has publicly announced that his MPs would join a coalition with the Yellow Party and serve under its leader, Olga Kowalski, were he appointed Prime Minister. However, Lord Toff, a former leader of the Red Party and a Peer in the House of Lords (the second largest party after the election) probably has enough support among MPs to be able to regularly command a majority. Both the Yellow Party and the Purple Party are committed to the following reforms:

- The repeal of the Human Rights Act 1998
- Abolishing the Scottish Parliament
- The limitation of the powers of the Supreme Court.
