

Author conversations

On working with Revel

Mary Anne Poatsy

Montgomery County Community College

When we were asked to start our book, we had to work with the Office — the release of the Office books as well, so we were working on a very tight deadline. So we had nine months to write our first edition.

When we created Tech in Action, we, as I said, started with videos. And our intent was to make the videos an incorporated part of the textbook. And technology lagged behind our vision on that.

So now, we're in the Revel platform. And so students can be reading through the textbook and click on a video just where it's needed, and get the [reinforcement] and questions right there after they've read the content. So, we're incredibly excited to have that type of technology finally catch up with our vision.

www.pearson.com