>> Always put yourself in a role to be able to give back. Since high school, I've always been trying to set myself up to be in a position to give back, and this online degree is going to put me in an even better position to be able to do that. Something that surprised me the most of my online experience is the accessibility to these professors. You know, not having a face with a name, they don't know me. They don't know what I look like, who I am, what I do. So, to be able to have that accessibility to them and to answer emails and how quick they are and supportive they are and willing to work around our schedules. They know 90 percent of us have something else that we're doing has been incredible. I'm also in the New York National Guard as a construction, a masonry engineer. So, trying to balance those two plus working on a Master's Degree on top of it, it does get tough.
