

Mickey Maloney practised being a spy on his five sisters. Every week he picked one sister to spy on. He would hide in all sorts of places – behind curtains, in rubbish bins, under beds.

Mickey Maloney said he found out how much junk food his sisters ate in a week and reported that to his mother. He found out how long they spent on the telephone and reported that to his father. He found out a lot of secret things they didn't tell their parents.

Mickey kept all the information about his sisters in a black notebook. One day, however, his sister caught him hiding in her closet. She was really mad and she cut up his black notebook. That was the end of Mickey Maloney's important information about his sisters.

Mickey Maloney tried spying on his parents but they weren't that easy to spy on. He did find out that his father was a chocolate thief. Even in the middle of the night he would creep around the house pinching chocolates. He reported this information to his mother but she said she already knew, so he gave up spying on them! He decided that it was only any good spying on people if you could pass on some information that nobody knew.
